

Scripps Howard Foundation announces postgraduate journalism fellowship program

Applications accepted Nov. 1 through Dec. 15 for four year-long positions to help journalists become tomorrow's newsroom leaders

Oct. 20, 2017

CINCINNATI — The Scripps Howard Foundation is launching a year-long postgraduate fellowship program designed for individuals who aspire to journalism leadership positions in the media industry.

Four individuals will be chosen for a Scripps Howard Fellowship, which will begin in June 2018 and run for 12 months. The program is offered in partnership with the Scripps News Washington Bureau, Newsy and ProPublica. Participants will be able to choose from among several reporting or newsroom experiences in Washington, D.C., and New York City. In addition to their immersive newsroom residencies, participants will convene for a series of workshops on leadership, project management, innovation and the business of journalism.

“This program is designed to be a career-defining experience for the participants,” said Liz Carter, president and CEO of the Scripps Howard Foundation. “We are looking for candidates who want to dig in and learn from some of the best journalists and leaders in the business.”

The program is seeking applicants with a demonstrated passion for and commitment to journalism and a desire to learn the skills needed to lead the newsrooms of tomorrow. A journalism degree is not required.

Each fellow will receive a salary of $50,000 plus benefits, including medical and dental insurance. Applications will be accepted from Nov. 1 through Dec. 15. Visit the Foundation's website for more details and to apply. Winners will be announced in March 2018.
