

SCRIPPS  HOWARD

FUND

Internships

The Scripps Howard Fund is offering 24 internships, including new and long-standing programs that will allow students to get hands-on experience and participate in journalism training sessions.

Internships include:

- $15 per hour
- Opportunities to connect with other interns and professional journalists through training sessions.

Opportunities:

Voces Internship of Idaho: An effort in Idaho to develop Hispanic interns in a state where Hispanic/Latinx people make up a more than 13% of the population but a small part of media. The Fund supported the program's initial internships in 2022. In 2023 and 2024, the Fund will provide funding for a minimum of three interns. Voces will select the interns and the host newsrooms.

Nonprofit newsrooms: To combat news deserts across the country, the Fund is creating a program aimed at providing interns to nonprofit newsrooms, at no cost to the newsroom. The Fund is partnering with the Institute for Nonprofit News (INN), which leads the 400-newsroom INN Network. The Fund and INN team will select news organizations to host the interns, and those organizations will hire the interns. There will be six 10-week internships and three 20-week internships.

Science reporting internships: There will be two science-reporting internships with the Science News Media Group, which was co-founded by E.W. Scripps. Former Science News interns have gone on to positions with The New York Times, The Washington Post, Science, Nature, Health, NOVA, Discover, Popular Science, U.S. News & World Report, Scientific American, ABC television, the Associated Press, The San Francisco Chronicle and Science News, among others. Deadline is Jan. 9, 2023

University internships: The Fund's legacy program provides internships to universities that are then awarded to their students. Each participating university will select an intern and a host newsroom. Host newsrooms agree to pay the intern $3,000 for the summer internship in addition to a $3,000 stipend provided by the Fund. There will be eight of these.

Statehouse News Bureau: The Statehouse News Bureau through Ohio University will have two interns per year at $3,000 each.

Applications open in 2023. Check back for links to apply.

An intern can apply for a grant to help with housing, relocation and other expenses to support their ability to accept an internship. Interns would apply to the Fund after being awarded an internship.
