

Scripps Howard Fund offers journalism grant for community colleges

Dec. 15, 2024

CINCINNATI – The Scripps Howard Fund is offering a grant to community colleges and regional branch colleges to help them grow journalism education programs.

The one-time grant of up to $15,000 is aimed at creating, expanding or improving the college’s experiential journalism programs, with a focus on serving underrepresented students and providing innovative experiential learning.

“Community colleges offer a different path to the journalism industry – particularly for those who come from low-income backgrounds and are unable to complete a four-year degree,” said Mike Canan, senior director of journalism strategies for the Scripps Howard Fund. “Getting these students’ diverse viewpoints into newsrooms will help the organizations better understand and connect with their audiences.”

The grant application should include:

- A thorough explanation of activities, timeline and how the proposal will address the opportunity.
- An outline of the experiential learning the students will participate in as part of the proposal.
- How the proposal will share learnings and best practices with other community colleges.
- The desired outcomes of the proposal. This should include any proposed metrics in addition to the required reporting metrics noted below.
- Other sources of funding (if applicable) for the project.

The deadline to apply is April 30, 2025.
